Dear Prime Minister Starmer,

I am writing to share my disappointment about the way that asylum seekers are being treated. It is particularly unfair that these people are going through hard times just because they're different. These people are not allowed to work and can't earn any money. This can lead to feeling depressed and can't enjoy any leisure activities. They will not be able to socialise and will lose motivation.

They won't have an option to choose where they live and will have to share a room with a stranger. Furthermore, this means they won't go to university and will have a low paying job which can put them living in poverty. This is why you should help them and treat others like you want to be treated so they don't have to live in these terrible conditions.

These people are having to be moved around and could break friendships that they make with other people this means they will not be able to socialise and will lose motivation. These people will have to live in hotel but not all hotels are great, these people will be forced to eat the food even though they might not like it. So we would like if you could spread the message to help those in need.

I do hope you listen to my views and take the appropriate action as soon as you can.

Yours faithfully,

Emily Bonner
