Dear Prime Minister Starmer,

I'm writing to share my disappointment about the way that the government is currently treating asylum seekers in our country.

It is particularly unfair that these asylum seekers are not allowed to work. This means that if they are not allowed to work that means they cannot earn money. Also, if they don't work they will be bored, and they can't afford to enjoy a fun life like I do. If you stay in the house, you will lose your motivation.

Asylum seekers are also not allowed to go to university so, this will mean they cannot get higher qualification and higher paid jobs.

It isn't fair that refugees have no choice where they live or who they share with. When they are moved around with little notice they struggle to form friendships and will add to further misery, loneliness and even depression.

The interview they have is too long and intimidating, and it is appalling that decisions take several years! These poor people are left in limbo!

I do hope you listen to my views and take the appropriate action as soon as you can.

Yours faithfully,

Bethany Smith
